Only Vice-Presidential Debate: Kamala Was Bitchy and Pence's Fly, Model For Civility and Avoiding Questions. Steve Schmidt Goes Crazy 'Mark of the Devil'

First, we had a presidential debate that was so annoying as to be intolerable. Now, we had a VP debate that was boring as to be, well, intolerable. Not only was it devoid of policy (like the Trump-Biden debate) but it was, unlike that last debate, completely and utterly tedious in that both Kamala and Pence routinely avoided actually answering the question. This is typical politician-speak, so no surprise there, but it was exceptionally pronounced this time.

Having gotten used to Trump's bombastic behavior and then listening to this milktoast snoozefest made me wish Trump was there. As least that was entertaining. It's fair to say that VP debates are utterly inconsequential, other than to get a faint glimpse at who the president's sidekick will be for the next four years.

I'm positive that the boringness of the debate caused the viral fly to become a thing on the internet. Apparently, a fly landed on Pence's head during the debate without him noticing. Fly swatters released by the Biden campaign have now sold out in an impressive PR and sneaky fundraising effort. Never-trump Republican Steve Schmidt chimed in about this, saying that flies are typically a mark of the devil. What should be mentioned is that Steve was a staffer in the Bush white house, who started an illegal war for oil. So, spare us the handwringing because you, Steve, are a criminal who should be in jail. Not much to say about Kamala, other than that she was her typical, unlikable self. On the bright side, at least the next debate won't put me to sleep.
